Sulphation of the galactosyl residue in plasma glycoproteins is increased in myeloma. Proteins synthesized by myeloma cells are sulphated at the galactosyl residue. We investigated whether synthesis and/or metabolism of plasma glycoproteins is altered in myeloma. The sulphation of plasma glycoproteins was studied by labelling with Na²(³⁵)SO₄ and measuring the ³⁵SO₄ released in the culture medium. Based on the amount of ³⁵SO₄ released, the percentage of sulphate in glycoconjugates was calculated. Glycoproteins were isolated from 16 myeloma patients and 10 controls. The mean percentage of sulphate in glycoconjugates was 2.2% in controls and 4.3% in myeloma patients (p less than 0.01). The increase in the percentage of sulphate in glycoconjugates in myeloma is probably due to increased sulphation of plasma glycoproteins. Documenting a life lived as I go along.
